

Space Times Article Submission Guidelines

The readership of Space Times magazine are space professionals, space enthusiasts, educators, students, and those interested in the space program, space exploration, science, and policy. The tone of the magazine leans more toward conversational rather than formal. Articles are written for an educated audience that has a great interest in space topics but may not necessarily be familiar with an author's specific topic. Virtually any topic involving space science, technology, exploration, law, or policy may be covered. Issues relevant to the civil, commercial, and military and intelligence space sectors are also welcome.

- Articles published in Space Times magazine are written with a clear and understandable explanation of technical concepts.
- Articles range from 600 to 2,500 words, and any exceptions are handled on a case-by-case basis.
- Articles must be submitted in Microsoft Word format, Helvetica font, 12 pt. Additional formatting will be handled during the editing process.
- Submission of photos, images, tables, charts, or other visual support is strongly encouraged. All images must be provided in high resolution JPG format. Images must be provided as separate files.
- Articles must be submitted through email – including word document and jpeg images attached separately.
- Captions and sources for all images are required. Obtaining permission from the owner of any photos or other visuals is the responsibility of the article's author.
- Author can include their social media handles for credit when the article is promoted on AAS social media platforms.
- Articles must include:
 - 3-5 title header options
 - A one-to-two sentence summary of the article
 - If applicable, subheadings providing separation between major sections of the article
 - A one-to-two sentence byline/author biography which will appear at the end of the article

All articles and photos can be submitted through email to Molly Kearns, Editor, at molly.kearns@nasa.gov.

Articles will be accepted and published on a continuous basis. Edited articles will be published on the Space Times e-publication website www.astronautical.org/space-times and shared through AAS social media channels.

If you are interested in making a continuous contribution and becoming a volunteer content writer for the American Astronautical Society, please contact Molly Kearns at molly.kearns@nasa.gov.
